

Before the "Do Not Call" list came out. We would get an average of 4 - 5 calls per day with solicited calls from our credit card companies and various other agencies. Since we have been on the "Do Not Call" list, we have not received any calls. We like it this way and do not want this to be changed or modified. If we need any information about incentives or promotions, we will call the companies directly. They still send the information through the mail. How many forms of the same information do we really need? The solicited calls are a waste of our precious time at home that most of us are limited to these days. The last thing we need to deal with are annoying calls that interrupt this time. I'm sure we all have more important things to do.
